Tales Beyond Fried Rabbit by Fred J Vatter

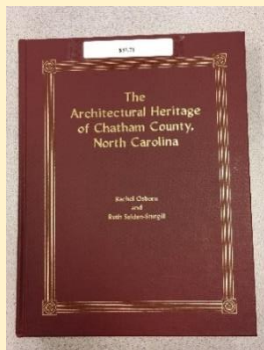

Fred Vatter's delightful saunter into some of the many corners of Chatham County's past tell us of old houses, aged country stores, church yards with intriguing gravestones, and venerable public buildings; settlements and cemeteries now lost due to dams and other effects of progress; ordinary people who know the county's past and would love to tell you about it, as well as prominent civic leaders now long dead.

Chatham County, 1771-1971 edited by Wade H. Hadley, Doris Horton, and Nell Strowd, 1971

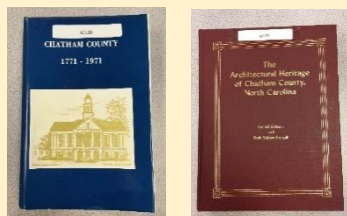

Now in its second facsimile reprinting, the book contains chapters on the colonial and Revolutionary War period, county government, politics, Civil War, transportation, town and county life, communities and post offices, churches, education, fraternal orders, African Americans, agriculture, industry, and brief summaries of well-known families. (6" x 9", 528 pg., photographs, index).

The Architectural Heritage of Chatham County North Carolina
by Rachel Osborn and Ruth Selden-Sturgill, edited by Marjorie Hudson, 1991

Sections on the history and architectural development of Chatham County and of Pittsboro are followed by historic architecture inventories of Pittsboro, Siler City, Goldston, Mt. Vernon Springs and Ore Hill, and each of the county's townships. The book is lavishly illustrated with black & white photographs and thoroughly documented. (8.5" x 11", 391 pages, index).

Chatham County 1771-1971 and The Architectural Heritage of Chatham County North Carolina

This two-book reference collection is offered at a substantial savings.

Map of Chatham County, NC by Capt. N. A. Ramsey, 1970 by Capt. N. A. Ramsey, 1870

This reproduction of the original map by Capt. Nathan A. Ramsey shows rivers, bridges, mills, churches, roads and railroads, and many family locations. Ramsey was the Captain of Company D of the 61st Regiment, CSA. Organized in 1862, Co. D fought in battles in Virginia and North Carolina, and was sent several times to Chatham County to round up deserters. Their success depended on knowing the geography as well as the locations of families. In 1870 Ramsey put this information on a map. (17" x 22"). Includes index of names.

Map of the Coal Fields of Chatham and a Portion of the Mineral Region of N.C. by Lucy Worth Jackson, 1874

A reproduction of the original hand-drawn, hand-colored map shows Chatham County and several nearby counties, emphasizing the coal fields near the Deep River. It was drawn by Lucy Worth Jackson (1828-1909), daughter of Governor Jonathan Worth, and wife of J.J. Jackson, Pittsboro lawyer and owner of a coal mine near Carbondon in Chatham County. (17" x 22", color). A limited number of framed prints available in the Gift Shop only.

Temporarily unavailable.

The Gravesites of Chatham County, North Carolina by Will and Audrey Heiser

When published in 2005, this was the most complete survey ever done of all the cemeteries and family plots in Chatham County. Since then it has been replaced by our online database of gravesites at CemeteryCensus.com. The two-volume Gravesites is still a useful resource for genealogical researchers. There are more than 27,000 names from the early 19th century to present day. Price has been reduced.

Not available online or by mail. Available at the Gift Shop only.

"Our Land, Our Lives" and "Land Beneath the Waters" Combination DVD

"Our Land, Our Lives" was produced from a 15-minute slide and tape documentary about the construction of Jordan Lake. "Land Beneath the Waters" is a 35-minute documentary tracing the history of the New Hope River valley through the development of Jordan Lake and covers native population, early settlement, Revolutionary and Civil Wars, acquisition of properties and construction of the dam, and present-day recreational activities. The two documentaries are available as a combination DVD.
