

Junior Tar Heel Historian Projects Displayed at Chatham Historical Museum

Who says kids don't care about history?!

Katherine Szczesniak's two homeschoolers created projects for The Tar Heel Junior Historian Competition in 2018 that featured Chatham County topics—Chatham Mills and S&T's Soda Shoppe. The competition is over and both students learned a great deal about history, how the competition works, and got to see many other projects at the convention.

The students have agreed to display their projects in the Gallery of the Historic Courthouse through June 2019. The projects can be seen whenever the Museum is open.

The Chatham Historical Museum is pleased to provide a place for others to see these projects and read about the history these students discovered.
